
title: "The Plastic Hammer: The Lament" author: Alex Gonzalez date: 2024-11-17 updated: 2024-10-09

Feels

This is chapter one - but I've been carrying this with me for years. The thought of writing scares me - because it, to my opinion, flirts so close to - somewhere I don't know if I want to go. Has to do with perception I suppose And a fear of being cringe.

I distract and distract To get to this land Its another place entirely And I run from it - run far from the land for I want to build a little island of my own.

And this book was supposed to be something enlightened for the world. But my intentions were bad. And I am thankful I have not written.

I guess it is a thing of a thing of thing.
But something is a thing. What does writing have to do with it?

Imposter syndrome madness

The Plastic Hammer

It seems pretty clear - lest to the author - that death is at the door. Yet - one finds themselves with an insatiable desire to live - and to live forever. And one is afraid if they do not change their ways - they won't end up at the right place But the wrong place. The right place

- where there is everyone you've ever met Seems so far And a looney tunes idea. So then what - what does one do when everything is going to fade away? Where does one put their foundation on life.

So what is the purpose of life? How can anyone dare to ask? Some say Jesus Some say to procreate Some don't say much at all - and cast their nets to the wind I am all of those folks and then some the lowest of the mighty the race of saint.

The Race of Saint

What does it mean to be the race of saint? I think of the garden - moreover a path - moreover marble with hedges - and flowers on the side of each. I think of the Life without Screens

It is hard to imagine a life without screens - a way to enter a window into ones own world - imagination - terminal - the computer - they have been around for a while. Will one miss the screens in heaven? The sermon asked if we could depart with the things we have I'm looking at this computer - nice and cold steel - a company purchased across a metal monolithic gaming machine amid a pink ukele on the wall. Scatted posters of knots and a print of an oyster. It would be hard to give away ones things - I think in a way - this github repo in which I am writing this on - or at least the concept of a repo is one that feels right. Feels that I can finally centralize and begin to produce canons of work - of fiction - of non fiction - but to do that - one must get there hamsters out of the wheel. Could one live without screens? I think so.
